Hohoe Irrigation project commissioned

The commissioning of the irrigation project took place on Wednesday 25th September, 2019 at about 1:15pm. In attendance were Municipal Director of Agriculture, Members of Rice corporation Association, Rice Farmers, Land Owners, Chiefs, Community Leaders and Community Members. The Kamsio irrigation project is located at Gbi-Wegbe in the Hohoe Municipality of the Volta Region of Ghana. The project is the first and the only irrigation scheme in the Volta North and also the third in the entire region. Though Volta Region is the largest rice producing region in the country, about 90% of the production is under rain fed subsistence agriculture. The Kamsio Irrigation Project, therefore, came as welcome news to majority of the farmers in the Gbi-Wegbe community. The Project started in May, 2018 and finally came to close in September, 2019. The main objective of the project is to double rice output among women rice cultivators in the Hohoe Municipality and by that reduce poverty among targeted women rice farmer households. Specifically, the project is to engage one hundred women rice farmers, irrigate 40 acres of the Kamsio valley, to ensure the cultivation of all year round rice farming. The project will also ensure that the current rice output by women rice farmers increased at least 100 percent by the close of project implementation and reduce targeted farmers vulnerability to climate change issues among others. The project was handed over to the community and members of the community were very grateful to the donors and CRAN for the assistance given to enable them farm all year.
